Suit: Drop 'good moral character' requir

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Is good moral character required to wax eyebrows and give facials? In the state of Pennsylvania it is, and two women denied licenses to work as cosmetologists because they ran afoul of that regulation are challenging the law in court.

Courtney Haveman and Amanda Spillane filed suit on Tuesday, with the help of non-profit law firm the Institute for Justice, claiming the state's good moral character requirement for cosmetologists is unfair and unconstitutional.

The women both suffered from addictions in the past, which led to criminal records, they said. Haveman said her addiction to alcohol led to a number of misdemeanor infractions that inspired her to turn around her life. She has been sober for over five years, got married, had a baby and now mentors women who struggle with alcohol abuse.

She decided to pursue a career in cosmetology, completed beauty school and had a job lined up at a salon. So she was shocked when she learned her license application was denied, citing her moral character.

"I made mistakes in my past, I paid my dues and I had learned and grown from them," she said at a press conference Wednesday announcing the lawsuits.

Spillane said her addictions led her down a path of criminal behavior, and she was incarcerated for burglary. While she was locked up, she said she went through extensive rehabilitation, became a Christian and changed her life. She was released on good bond and worked in fast food until she could be a cosmetologist. "I thought cosmetology was a career I could put behind me, having a record," she said, adding that she was in prison where she was incarcerated for cosmetology to inmates. She had a job lined up at a salon. "It is frustrating and upsetting to know a different person and that no one is going to give you a chance," she said.

Under the Pennsylvania laws prohibiting people from working in cosmetology, the women's lawyers say that is unfair. "The good moral character requirement has nothing to do with painting nails or cutting hair."

"In fact, there is no requirement for barbers, so it requires character to tweeze a hair, not a cosmetologist," said Andrew Ward, a lawyer with the Institute for Justice.

"People deserve a second chance, and when you deny it to them, you are more likely to wind up committing crimes," said Erica Smith, a lawyer with the Institute for Justice.

For Haveman and Spillane, the lawsuits aren't complicated, saying they just want to make an honest living. "I just want there needs to be opportunities in our situation, to have a career that can provide for themselves and not to rely on the state or other people," Spillane said.

Cuba health mystery: Diplomats had inn

MIAMI (AP) — American diplomats affected by mysterious health incidents in Cuba showed damage in the inner ear shortly after they complained of weird noises and sensations, according to their earliest medical exams, published Wednesday. The detailed findings were published in a medical journal nearly two years after what the U.S. calls "health attacks" began — and they shed no new light on a possible culprit.

"What caused it, who did it, why it was done — we don't know any of those things," said Dr. Michael Hoffer of the University of Miami Miller School of Medicine, who led the exams.

The U.S. says since late 2016, 26 people associated with the embassy in Havana suffered problems that include dizziness, ear pain and associated with balance, what's called the vestibular system — although there were no medical records to compare.

Testing of 10 other people who were in the same building at the time of the incidents found they were fine, Hoffer reported in the journal Laryngoscope Investigative Otolaryngology. Hoffer also traveled to Cuba to check on other Americans stationed there, who also turned out to be healthy.

Those inner-ear balance problems have been central to the government's ongoing health investigation. And earlier this year, a team of doctors at the University of Pennsylvania who examined many of these patients, but more recently, reported they suffered a concussion
