The root cause of this dispute is the filing of a high bill complaint.

This high bill complaint was filed by my tenant on the first floor.

Peco came out and investigated the cause of the high bill.

Peco discovered that there was a Meter Mix up.

Mix up meaning Peco was charging the second floor meter to the first floor, and the first floor meter to the second floor.

Peco also discovered foreign wiring. The porch light was being charged to the first floor. Because this light was being used by both apartments that light cannot be charged to one party, which deems that light foreign wiring. I do ~~not~~ agree that the porch light is and should be deemed foreign wiring, however I do not agree that the porch light is the cause of the high bill.

Remember we are talking about one seventy five watt light, that both tenants agree was never used. This doesn't dismiss the fact that this light was foreign wiring. I am disputing that light being the cause of the high bill.

Peco also found foreign wiring in the back of the first floor apartment. The back room of the first floor apartment's electric was connected to the second floor's meter. This means the back room of the first floor apartment was being charged to the second floor.

Now that we know the back room of the first floor apartment is connected to the second floor's meter, my question is how is it possible for the first floor to have a high bill?

My answer is the Meter mix up makes the high bill possible.

With all that being said I believe myself and pecc are both somewhat responsible.

I would also like to know how long has this meter mix up existed.

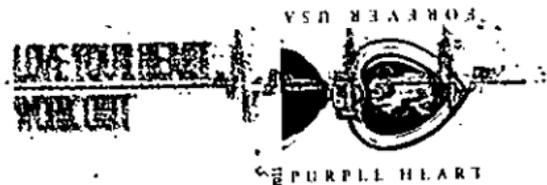

I would also like to go on record saying that the first tec pecc sent out told me, because of the meter mix up no one would be charged. I have asked pecc can I speak to that tec numerous times, but I'm being told they have no record of who she was.
