Desaki benefit raises $6,578 for Women's Resources

Martini and Manicures, a bi-annual fund raiser held at The Garden at Desaki on Route 611 in Swiftwater, raised more money at the April 18 event than ever before, with $6,578 for Women's Resources of Monroe County. It is 60 percent more than what was raised at previous fundraisers over the past seven years. The event has helped the nonprofit recently construct its shelter playroom and nursery. The funds were raised through gift registry style donations in which attendees could pledge to purchase specific items that WRMC selected for the playroom and nursery such as linens, toys and electronics. Some items were sponsored by individuals, while groups of women joined together to sponsor larger items. The Garden at Desaki donated a new crib which served as the centerpiece of the event and was filled with generous on-site donations of toys, clothing and other children's necessities. "We really embraced the concept of collecting these specific items to furnish the newly completed nursery and playroom of the second shelter. We believe that in this economy, it is especially important for people to know how their donations are being used and this was such a meaningful way to give," said Christina Rodis-Durst, Director of Public Relations and Events for The Garden who praised the group effort in the project. Funds were also raised by Martini and Manicures partners who participated in the event such as Mount Airy Spa, Littech and MHK attorneys as well as through The Garden's bar sales, and sales of WRMC items such as rings and neckties donated at a new crib which and Manicures is held by The Garden at Desaki every spring and fall.

If so, nitrogen receptors could be targeted in therapy to drive the cancer out, she said.

New drug

In Gall's case, a drug approved for lung cancer patients just last summer could be a lifesaver.

Crizotinib, developed by Pfizer under the brand name Xalkori, has been found to shrink or stabilize tumors in patients carrying a gene mutation known as ALK, or anaplastic lymphoma kinase.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration sped up approval of the oral drug for some patients diagnosed with non-small-cell lung cancer after weighing the drug's success in attacking other kinds of cancer.

As for the emotional toll of hearing she has lung cancer — and being unclear to how she got it — Gall realizes thoughts that might distract from her goal to get well.

"I try not to dwell on the why because it just takes you down a rabbit hole, and that's not good," she said. "I try to look forward and not backward."

Husband Kurt bought a radon detection kit to check their home's levels of the odorless, ground-emitted gas. The

For Judy Stephens, the symptoms began with back pain that would migrate to her upper right leg.

"It was the classic picture of, say, a pinched nerve," said her son, Thad Stephens, an emergency room physician. He arranged for a CT scan, then a full body scan. The discovery of a tailbone tumor that had spread from the lungs stunned the family.

"I was bitter, thinking of these little old ladies who smoked all their lives and never got cancer," Thad Stephens said. "Mom never did anything to hurt herself."

Having not once smoked, Judy Stephens at age 71 was told her lung cancer would claim her in three to six months. She battled bravely for 16 months, aided by an experimental drug called Tarceva, which has been found to help some female cancer patients in their post-menopausal years.

Her death last October happened to coincide with new recommendations issued by the National Comprehensive Cancer Network, a professional medical group. The network for the first time called for lung cancer screening using low-dose CT — but only for older, heavy smokers.

Judy Stephens' family could not help but wonder how she got sick. Suspicion turned to the basement of her Shawnee, Kan., home, where she spent time at the sewing machine stitching dresses for her doll collection.

don over the years? Did ceramic dust that would accumulate when she made and repaired dolls drift into her lungs? Was it secondhand smoke from her husband's habit, which he gave up more than 30 years ago?

All speculation. No answers.

Listen to your body

"We've done such a good job with smoking cessation messages, people think it's the only way of developing lung cancer — and that's a dangerous assumption," said Vidaver of the National Lung Cancer Partnership. "You need to listen to your body."

Gall did just that, and her primary care physician reacted quickly in scheduling a chest X-ray that revealed suspicious shadows.

Experts caution that chest X-rays and CT scans shouldn't be relied upon routinely and their ability to detect lung cancer is far from foolproof. Your cough in most cases is just a cough, but one that persists for weeks should be brought to a physician's attention, whether you smoke or not.

"Whatever I can put forward to raise awareness and help prevention, maybe that's what I've been chosen to do," said Gall, who works for the Community Blood Center.

She noted that her profession is to help people in life-threatening situations. And suddenly, out of the blue, those people include her.
