Re: Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission v. Butcho, Inc.

RJP

Dear Mr. McNulty:

We have received your letter with attachments in connection with the captioned matter purporting a copy of an Order for the above-referenced matter.

Please be advised that this office's receipt of your correspondence DOES NOT constitute notice of claim against the concerned Lloyd's Underwriters, if any.

Lloyd's itself does not underwrite risks. It is the individual and corporate underwriters transacting business at Lloyd's who do so. There is neither a central policy office nor a central claims office at Lloyd's. Records of risks insured by any of the underwriters at Lloyd's are maintained by the concerned insurance brokers, who are also typically authorized to accept claims notices. If not so authorized, those brokers should be able to identify the designated claims agent. You may therefore wish to identify and contact the purportedly concerned insurance broker with respect to your client's claim.

Alternatively, if you are having difficulty contacting that broker, please provide the undersigned with copies of the insurance documentation (i.e., the purported policy) evidencing the purported coverage at issue. This will enable us to determine whether the risk at issue was in fact insured by any of the underwriters at Lloyd's. We will then inform you of our findings, and if applicable, we will identify the proper party for you to contact with respect to your client's claim.

This response is made as a courtesy, without prejudice to any rights and defenses arising under any coverage issued or alleged to have been issued by Lloyd's Underwriters in connection with this matter.

Very truly yours,

Lloyd's Illinois, Inc.
