Ananta specializes with multi-unit businesses, specifically hoteliers in the hospitality industry. Working with nationwide hoteliers, we've learned they also own properties in Pennsylvania and have plans to develop more properties in the State. We intend to work with clients we already have a pre-existing business relationship with. Once licensed, Ananta plans to grow a portfolio of business in the Pennsylvania hospitality market. We have acquired almost 7% of the Ohio hospitality market and intend on achieving similar results in Pennsylvania. Leveraging our transparent approach with word-of-mouth marketing alongside a handful of hospitality networks and associations, we aim to maximize these mediums to identify more opportunities. The only true hands-on work experience Ananta has in Pennsylvania is analyzing a handful of PPNL invoices from existing Ananta clients that already have electricity accounts in Pennsylvania. Ananta's energy suppliers began educating the company on the different utilities across Pennsylvania. The company has been in contact with these utilities and is currently familiarizing themselves on territories and their borders with energy co-operatives. Ananta plans to explore additional opportunities once licensed in the State of Pennsylvania.

Understanding Electricity Pricing

The First Step to Controlling Your Energy Costs

Introduction

Electricity market competition provides businesses the opportunity to choose a retail energy supplier instead of staying with the local utility for their electricity supply. By choosing a retail supplier, you have the ability to secure your power in a way that is customized and unique to your business' needs.

The first step of taking charge of your energy spend is understanding the elements of electricity pricing and the factors to consider when choosing your energy supplier. You can explore different suppliers and pricing plans to determine which ones best suit your company's needs.

Understanding these details will empower you to make better choices about your electricity purchasing plan and ensure that you are getting value out of the relationship with your electricity supplier.

🔑 The first step of taking charge of your energy spend is understanding the elements of electricity pricing and the factors to consider when choosing your energy supplier. 🔑

If you are currently served by your local utility, you will see your total monthly costs broken out into two main categories, supply charges (including generation costs) and distribution charges (or the cost to move the power to your facility). In competitive energy markets, retail electric suppliers can provide you with your electricity supply and bill you for those supply charges, while the distribution charges are set by/billed by the local utility—who still owns the power lines that move the electricity to your facility.

Distribution charges include the cost of maintaining the poles and power lines. These charges, which are regulated and set by tariffs, are the same for all electric consumers within a rate class served by a particular utility. Your retail electric supplier does not have any impact on these charges.

Unlike distribution charges, generation charges are comprised of multiple cost components. Historically, generation is the most variable component of your electricity spend, and therefore, it is one of the most important to carefully manage in order to stay on target with your operational budget.

Components of an Electricity Price

Electricity pricing is typically quoted/billed in dollars per kilowatt hour [$/kWh].

HOW ELECTRICITY IS MEASURED

Electricity is measured in kilowatt hours [kWh], or megawatt hours [MWh].

$$1,000 \text{ watts} \times 1 \text{ hour} = 1\text{kWh}$$

$$1,000 \text{ kWh} = 1 \text{ MWh}$$

Generation charges are comprised of:

- Energy – The cost to produce electricity
- Congestion/Basis – Difference in the cost of electricity at the settlement zone/hub and your delivery point or facility's location
- Load Following – Costs associated with how and when electricity is used versus how it is purchased (i.e. your load shape). These costs account for when you use more energy during periods of higher demand and less energy during less-expensive timeframes and are based on a weighted average.
- Capacity – Costs associated with ensuring that enough power is available to all customers during periods of peak demand on the grid
- Ancillary Services – Additional services required to deliver electricity to end-users and maintain power grid reliability
- Renewables – Costs associated with procuring/ supplying electricity from renewable energy sources (the percentage of which is set/mandated by your state)
- Any relevant state and local taxes

It is important to compare the total price of your electricity, including all additional charges, to make an accurate comparison between retail electric suppliers. To compare two side-by-side quotes, you need to be sure you know which components each quote does/does not include. You should also inquire about any other fees that may have been left out of/included in the pricing quote.

📖 It is important to compare the total price of your electricity, including all additional charges, to make an accurate comparison between retail electric suppliers. 📖

Drivers of Your Supply Cost

Now that you understand more about the components that make up your supply cost, let's take a look at the factors impacting electricity supply prices. This portion of your electricity costs is market-driven and there are a few key factors that cause the market to move up or down.

They include the following:

Time of Day – Electricity markets are driven by demand which can vary throughout the day. Electricity prices are higher during times of great demand or on-peak. All other hours are considered off-peak hours.

Weather – Weather impacts demand and availability of energy generation resources. Seasons also affect demand, since usage is greater during peak seasons/extreme weather. Natural disasters can impact power prices if the resources used to generate electricity are affected (i.e. plants go off-line due to storms, freezing temperatures, etc.).

Geography – Locations with higher demand historically experience higher prices. The cost of delivery to meet demand, combined with the congestion costs and/or constraints to get enough power to certain regions, drives up costs.

Other Factors – The price of fuels used to generate electricity is closely correlated with power prices. Regulatory conditions can also impact prices. For instance, coal is a widely-used electric generation fuel source; however, with EPA regulations potentially resulting in coal plant closures, more expensive generation sources may need to be called upon to meet the demand. As well, the demand for natural gas for power generation may increase, putting additional pressure on power prices.

Energy Managers: Market Factors Checklist

The following chart shows some of the top factors impacting energy prices—factors to keep your eye on for near- and long-term energy purchasing decisions. This chart can be used to keep track of important information as you have conversations and receive market update information from your energy supplier or broker.

Products (Pricing Plans)

Most suppliers carry standard pricing options, such as fixed price and index priced electricity, but some companies also work with their customers to develop a customized pricing solution. Therefore, it is best to ask for a consultation with the energy suppliers you are considering and have them review all of their pricing options with you.

Customizing your electricity pricing plans will be primarily based on two variables: the level of engagement you would like to have in managing your plan, and your risk tolerance. With a range of different pricing plans—you have choices.

Ask for a consultation, usually complimentary, with the energy suppliers you are considering.

Fixed Price Product – Lock in the price of your electricity for a predetermined period of time, providing you with budget stability and predictability. If the market price of energy rises, you are protected. However, if the price of energy falls, you are locked into your fixed rate for your contract term and would not be able to capitalize on market dips.

Index Priced Product – The price is tied to market rates and is therefore changing regularly, based on the supply and demand factors described earlier. The advantages of an indexed priced plan include the opportunity to take advantage of market lows and the ability to take advantage of “time of use,” by scheduling activities when market rates are lower (i.e. off-peak hours). This type of plan works better with businesses with a higher risk tolerance.

Combination Products – Combination products give you the choice of locking in a portion of your electricity load at a fixed price and floating a portion of your load at market rates. In addition, there are also options that allow you to purchase a block of power at a fixed price and any usage that exceeds your block is settled and billed at the market price.

Choosing the Best Plan for Your Business

Now that you are aware of the different pricing plans, how do you know which one is best for your business? That answer depends on your risk tolerance, your need for budget certainty, and your desired level of involvement in managing your energy plan. The following illustration shows where the different procurement plans (i.e. products) fall on the risk tolerance scale. If you have more or less tolerance for risk and more or less need for budget certainty, you can see which products/plans might be a starting point for a conversation with an energy supplier:

As you can see, fixed pricing plans offer the most price certainty and significantly reduce your exposure to market risk, however there are higher premiums associated with locking in all pricing components for the term of your contract. At the opposite end of the spectrum, index pricing plans provide the opportunity to manage around market movement—including dips and sustained lows—but these plans also come with a higher risk of price uncertainty and therefore require additional time on the part of the buyer to remain apprised of market conditions and actively manage their energy plan.

Whatever your needs are, an energy supplier can help provide you with the details around your options, so that you can identify the best solution for your organization.

Choosing a Supplier

The following are some things you should consider when selecting an energy provider you can depend on:

- Financial strength
- Longevity of the company
- Reach (customer count/service area)

Just like with any other major purchase, price may not be the sole factor in making your final decision. The following factors should also be considered when selecting a retail energy provider:

- Do they provide a broad range of pricing/product options?
- Do they have the financial strength to ensure continuous and reliable service throughout the length of your contract?
- Do they offer details around their price structure/quotes with no surprises?
- Do they have locally-based, dedicated, knowledgeable account teams?
- Do they offer services and staff with energy expertise to help complement your own in-house energy management/procurement function?
- Do they offer ongoing communications to customers on market conditions and important changes that may impact their energy strategy?
- Do they include plans to help you meet sustainability goals?

Conclusion

In summary, purchasing electricity may not be solely driven by evaluating a $/kWh rate. To ensure that you are making the best energy purchasing decision:

Maintain a basic understanding of the market and keep up-to-date with market/regulatory updates from suppliers.

Take advantage of complimentary consultations to determine which pricing plans would work best for your organization.

Once you receive pricing from various suppliers, compare "apples to apples" quotes to ensure that there are no hidden fees and that each supplier is quoting the same inclusive pricing elements.

Evaluate other factors that are important to you in a retail energy supplier, including credibility, reliability and financial stability.

Exhibit F - Elevator Pitch

Hi how's it going sir/ma'am. My name is _____ and we are doing some energy consulting in the area, what is your name? Nice to meet you _____. Like I said, we are doing some consulting in the area regarding energy procurement. I was hoping you could point me in the right direction. Who would be the best person to speak to regarding energy procurement (owner, decision-maker, etc.)? We help businesses save money by helping them renegotiate their energy rates between multiple suppliers. Are you familiar with how this process works? What we do is we quantify your electricity usage and shop it around with multiple energy companies and find you the best rate with transparent pricing. We disclose our margin and have zero bias with any of the suppliers we represent. The only thing I need to see to show you how all this works is a copy of your energy bill.

3. Customers

Ananta Energy predominantly specializes with customers in the hospitality sector, specifically hotels and motels. Currently between Texas, Illinois, Ohio, Connecticut, New York, and Maryland we represent over 550+ commercial clients. 200+ of these clients are in the hospitality industry with the remainder consisting of small to medium-sized businesses including restaurants, manufacturing, community centers, retail stores, and gas stations.

4. Staffing Structure and Training Commitments.

TMGES, Inc., is comprised of five employees and has a unique structure where every employee is educated specifically to fill a certain role. The two employees responsible for sales and marketing are Merrill Mangalasseril (founder) and Rintu Philip. Drew Pickering is our Operations Architect who specializes in both operations and development. Abby Matgulis and Austin Huff both run operations management specializing in day to day administrative responsibilities for TMGES, Inc.

In a brief 7 years TMGES, Inc. has hired on four new employees, seeing steady growth as the company expands.

Given the size of TMGES, Inc. and the company's intentions to work with existing clients and intimate networks, there are no plans to hire sales personnel or sales representatives in the state of Pennsylvania for our first two years. In the event we do plan to hire in Pennsylvania, we have basic training guidelines leveraging training collateral with industry leading energy suppliers from our partners like Direct Energy. For new and/or additional hires, TMGES Inc. is committed to dedicating 40 hours per week over a two-week training period to properly educate and prepare future employees. Every employee is given broad exposure of every aspect of the business and is later given specialized training. We first educate them on the history of energy deregulation and the basics, starting with training collateral from one of revered energy suppliers, Direct Energy (see Exhibit E). Between that and several training/tutorial videos, we

After learning the basics, the employee then undergoes further specialized training to fulfill their future role with Ananta (whether it be sales, marketing, legal, HR, etc). For operations education, we provide hands on training from A to Z. Starting with our marketing approach (aka elevator pitch, see Exhibit F) to commission statements from our energy suppliers, we provide a transparent training structure in place. This transparent approach extends to our clients and proposals. Currently, we're in a data migration process, migrating from Google Suite applications to a Customized Customer Relationship Management portal that Drew has been building for the last 7 months. This reporting has allowed us to automate several processes in our operations and scale up to handle more clients operationally.

5. Business Plans

TMGES Inc plans to work with existing clients and intimate networks to provide electric and natural gas procurement services in the state of Pennsylvania. Additionally, we have plans to leverage one of our existing national hospitality association memberships, AAHOA (see <https://www.aahoa.com/about-aahoa>). We have 270 members located in Pennsylvania to connect with and identify opportunities in the Commonwealth market. We plan to travel to PA on organized meetings between Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh, and surrounding cities our clients wish to meet at. After 12 consecutive months of travel in PA, we plan to find continued success in the hospitality sector and see if any networking opportunities allow us to extend our reach into similar industries that we are currently operating.
