Bail revocation request denied

Man was warned against following victim's brother on Instagram, which he denied doing.

By Chris Palmer
STAFF WRITER
A Philadelphia judge on Friday denied a request to revoke bail for the man accused of fatally stabbing a real estate developer near Rittenhouse Square last year after prosecutors said the defendant recently tried to follow the victim's brother on Instagram.

Still, Common Pleas Court Judge Glenn B. Bronson told Michael White that any attempts to make contact with relatives of Sean Schellenger — whom White is accused of killing — would constitute "flagrant misbehavior." And the judge said that although he was not certain if White's request was intentional, he suggested that White stay off Instagram until his October trial to avoid any potential pitfalls.

Michael White is charged with third-degree murder in the death of Sean Schellenger. JESSICA GROFF / Staff Photographer

White, 22, faces third-degree murder charges in the stabbing of Schellenger, 37, on July 12, 2014, during a random encounter at 17th and Chancellor Streets. Authorities have said that White plunged a knife into Schellenger's back after Schellenger wrapped his arms around White in a wrestling move.

White told Bronson on Friday that he had "no idea" how his Instagram account sought to connect with that of Justin Schellenger. "I did not request to follow that man," White said. His lawyers, public defenders Dan Stevenson and Jonathan Strange, said they believed that Instagram's algorithm for suggesting potential friends could have surfaced Justin Schellenger's account, and that White could have inadvertently tapped on it.

Court says Pa. can bar atheists from invocation

By Marc Levy
ASSOCIATED PRESS
HARRISBURG — A federal appeals court on Friday reversed a lower court decision, ruling that the Pennsylvania House of Representatives' policy barring atheists from delivering invocations doesn't violate the U.S. Constitution. The decision by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit upheld the House's policy of limiting prayers at the start of legislative sessions to great chaplains who believe in a divine or higher power.

It reverses last year's decision by a district judge, who sided with atheists, agnostics, freethinkers and humanists in ruling that the restrictions violated constitutional prohibitions on making laws that establish a religion. After the guest chaplain policy was blocked, House Speaker Mike Turzai, a Republican, began assigning the invocation to House members.
