New Issuance:

A chance for storms capable of wind damage has emerged for areas of northern OH and far northwestern PA this evening. Storm activity is expected to be isolated, but a few damaging gusts are possible.

Another round of storms is expected across eastern FE Friday as a ‘cool’ front approaches the area. The greatest risk for damaging gusts is favored to be across northeast PA and northern NJ where a few clusters of storms are possible through the evening.

Note (A): Very hot/humid conditions will begin moving into FE today and last through the weekend; this will likely create daily risks of storm activity over the next several days. Further alerts will address these risks as needed.

Note (B): As previously mentioned, a fairly short-term heat wave is underway across portions of FE. Very high humidity will drive up heat index (i.e. ‘feels like’) temperatures to dangerous levels:

- Thurs: peak heat across western/southern FE (high temps in the low/mid 90’s, heat indexes near/over 100 degrees).
- Fri/Sat: peak heat across eastern/southern FE (high temps in mid/upper 90’s, heat indexes well over 100 degrees).
- Even outside of the peak heat areas, hot and very humid conditions are expected. Generally hot/humid conditions will remain through the weekend, until a cold front approaches early next week.

Update:

Notable changes this morning.

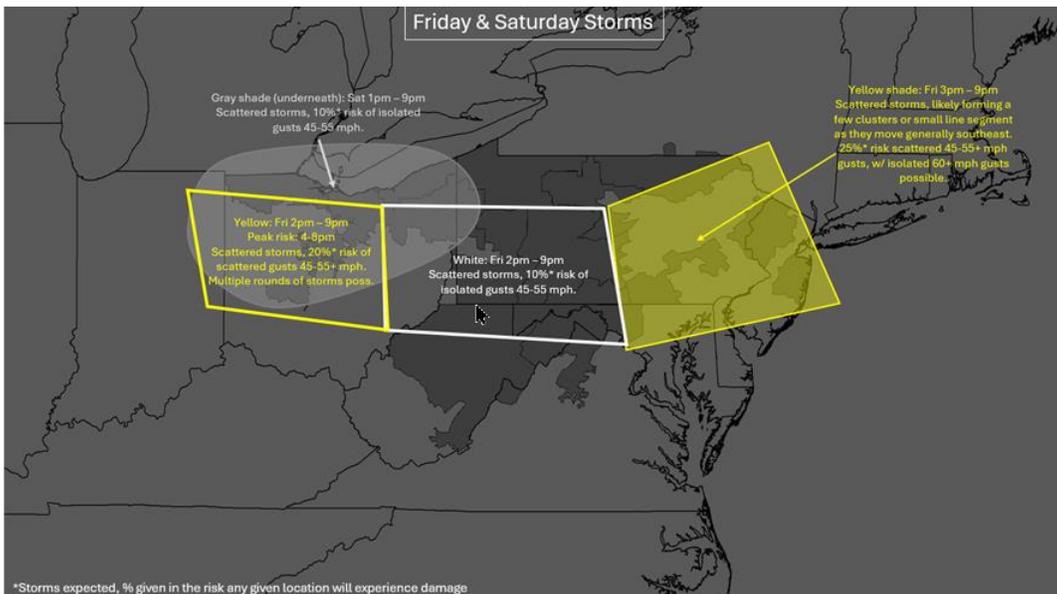

- Friday:
  - Expanded risk areas for eastern FE Friday afternoon, with slight increase in storm/wind risk.
  - Added risk of scattered storms/wind damage across areas of OH; with peak risk for damaging gusts this evening. (Storm activity likely overnight, but risk of damage currently too low to include in this alert).
  - Added risk of isolated storms across southern PA, northern WV and MD.
- Saturday:
  - Added marginal risk of damaging gusts across western FE.

Update:

Adjusted forecast for this afternoon/evening to expand risk of storms/damaging gusts further west into central PA and MD. Currently developing storms will progress southeast into these areas in the next 2-3 hours and will be capable of at least scattered damaging gusts through the early evening.

Update:

Saturday: expanded storm/wind risk area further west to cover most areas of PA, far northern WV and MD. Multiple rounds of storms are possible across this general area Saturday afternoon and through the overnight; greatest risk of damaging gusts is in the late afternoon and evening period.

Sunday: added another broad risk for storm activity across the southern half of FE, with a forecast that looks similar to today's given the presence of a stalled front draped across FE territory.

Sunday, July 27, 2025 @ 0847

Update:

Only changes this morning are to adjust the risk area a bit north and make a slight earlier timing adjustment. Otherwise, no changes to the concept: scattered storms are expected across a broad area of FE today, with a few storms likely becoming severe capable of sporadic damaging wind gusts.
