To who it may concern,

As a Pennsylvania resident, I am strongly opposed to the development of large data centers in our state. These facilities place enormous strain on local electric grids, water resources, and infrastructure, while offering limited long-term benefits to the communities that host them. I am concerned that the costs of grid upgrades, service interruptions, and environmental impacts will ultimately be shifted onto ratepayers and taxpayers, rather than placed on the companies profiting from these projects. Pennsylvania should prioritize the livelihood of its citizens, especially as our cost of living does not get better, and focus on affordable, reliable energy for residents and existing businesses. We should not subsidize energy-intensive developments that increase demand, raise risks to grid stability, and provide little accountability or transparency.
